Six persons were killed and five injured during the terrific thunderstorm, which broke over London yesterday. It was on Wandsworth Common where the fatalities occurred. Under a tree were gathered five children, who thought the storm was great fun. They were all singing, when suddenly a flash huddled them together in a heap. Death had stilled their song, for three were killed and the other two injured. On the other side of the common another tragedy was enacted. Two men, two women and two children had also sought refuge under a tree. Of these, three (a man, a woman and a child) were killed and three injured.
